I have enjoyed Gordon State in the brief time I have been here. The campus is very pretty and the Professors have been very helpful when I needed them. The facilities are of high quality and accessible. I have given and received no small amount of help at the student success center, which I personally think more people should be aware of. The classes have taught me a lot about myself and have made it very hard to choose a single field of study, they are all interesting in their own way. The honors class I have taken (Honors Western Civ) was very challenging and taught me a lot about politics and how I view them. This class (Along with my Ethics class) made it hard for me to decide what political party I identify as, it made me rethink my motives, and that is something I do not say lightly. I've met a lot of like-minded people here, a smaller college makes things a bit more personal. In a bigger college I would not be able to recognize anyone out of the crowds of thousands, but there is definitely a community feel about the campus. You start recognizing the "Regulars" in your area. I have had some great spontaneous discussion, and I have found friendship within study sessions that have veered severely off-topic. As for after Gordon, I hope to graduate with a 4.0 and transfer to Georgia Tech, though I already know I will miss Gordon.
